Ages and Stages: Journey to Independence

What do our children need today to become successful, independent, happy adults tomorrow? An education that provides a path to adulthood and sows the seeds for lifelong learning. We will discuss the planes of development children pass through as they mature and how to best support them at each stage.

“My Brain Works Differently” Exploring
Learning Differences at Home & School

Approximately 20 percent of children (10 million students) in United States schools have learning profiles that are not aligned with the expectations and teaching methodologies prevalent in mainstream school systems: they learn differently. In this workshop we will share local resources and explore ways to best support students.

Kids and Media:
Exploring Current Research & Resources

Modern technology makes media exposure almost unavoidable even for young children. While technology can provide education and entertainment, it can also impact children in a less positive way. As parents, how do we find the right balance of what to offer our children and when? Join us as we share current research and recommendations on developmentally appropriate practices for each age group - toddlers, preschool, lower elementary, upper elementary, and beyond. Bring your questions and concerns.
