

Kids and Media

Wednesday April 11, 2018 6-7:30 pm

The internet and modern technology make media exposure almost unavoidable even for young children. While technology can provide education and entertainment, it can also impact children in a less positive way. As parents, how do we find that right balance of what to offer our children and when?

Join us as we share current research and recommendations on developmentally appropriate practices for each age group - toddlers, preschool, lower elementary, upper elementary, and beyond. Bring your questions and concerns.

We will even have a panel of teens and tweens available to share how they feel about technology and answer questions about how they use it in their lives.

- Current research regarding media and children
- Resources and tools for making informed choices about use of media in your family
- Seven parent tested tips to help your family unplug and play
- How to teach your children about internet safety

Everyone in the community is welcome, spread the word!
